

“Sexuality is vitally important not only for human rights generally, but specifically to women’s rights, including reproductive self-determination, sexual choice, gender identity, family, and sexual health.”

- Anna Maitland
The Emergence of a Right to Sexuality in International Law

VOLUME 21 | NUMBER 2 | FALL 2012

The Celestial Security Dilemma:
The United States, the People’s Republic of China, and the Militarization of Outer Space Craig Mackey

Gender Norms for Professional
Muslim Women in Malaysia:
Perspectives from Women Active in Islamic Institutions Crystal Corman

Private Status or Public Spaces?
Social Integration of DC Farmers Markets Amanda C. Frank

The Evolution of Water Privatization:
Moving Forward with Public-Private Partnerships in Puerto Rico Olimar Maisonet-Guzmán

Gendering Transitional Justice Vera Wedekind

China, the ARF, and the South China
Sea: Is China Being Socialized? Lincoln Hines

How the West lost Russia:
NATO-Russia Relations Since 1991 Joshua K. Stanton

The Emergence of a Right to Sexuality in International Law Anna Maitland

JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL SERVICE

School of International Service
American University
Washington, DC

MISSION

The Journal of International Service provides students with a forum to present their contributions to the field of International Relations. The Journal is committed to publishing articles that represent the academic fields studied at the School of International Service. These include: comparative and regional studies, international communication, international development, environmental politics, international economics, peace & conflict resolution studies, international politics, and US foreign policy. The Journal began in 1991 under the name Swords and Ploughshares—a name that represented the process by which a nation transforms from a state of war to a civilization of peace. The philosophy of the School of International Service is a milestone in civilization's journey toward an international community based on mutual understanding and respect, a philosophy that the Journal of International Service strives to promote.

SUBMISSIONS

Publication in the Journal of International Service provides students with an excellent opportunity to contribute to their fields and enhance their academic experience. Authors must be Master's or Ph.D. students currently enrolled at the School of International Service, or alumni that have graduated within a year of the current submission deadline. Papers representing all tracks at the School are accepted.

STAFF

Editor-in-Chief
Maanasa K. Reddy

Publishing Editor
Clint Lohse

Managing Editor
Luke Heselden

Editorial Staff
Drew Cameron
Amanda Frank
Nick Heras
Josh Kuyers
Cameron Lorenzen
Chelsea Masters
Aurora Nou
Sheila Sengupta
Natalia Suvorova
Tara Vanacore
Jake Wright

Submit papers to editor@journalofinternationalservice.org

Visit us online at www.american.edu/SIS/JIS

© Copyright 2011 Journal of International Service
Some rights reserved.

