

JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL SERVICE

Volume 22 | Number 2 | Fall 2013

“By excluding the histories, opinions, and identities of members of the disability community, the state and society disregard the systematic marginalization of a majority of the population and, in the process, undermine the ideals of democracy.”

- Sarah Amin,
A Case for the Inclusion of Disability
in Democratic Governance

VOLUME 22 | NUMBER 2 | FALL 2013

ISSN: 2327-2973

How the War on Terror Frames Victim Ontology: A Comparative Analysis of the Case of Omar Khadr and Child Soldiers in Sierra Leone Luciana Storelli-Castro

Undermining Mexico’s Criminal Justice Reforms: The Case of Chihuahua Douglas Keillor

A Case for the Inclusion of Disability in Democratic Governance Sarah Amin

In the Straits of Denial: Energy Security, Maritime Power, and China’s “Malacca Dilemma” Nathan Levine

North African Identity Formation in France Monika Young

A Spring Breeze Off the Gaza Coast: The Law of the Sea in a Future Palestinian State Omar Yousaf

Rebuffed Renewables: The Private Market Failure of Chile’s Energy Policy Cassie Mullendore

Engaging Civil Society to Combat Human Trafficking in the United States Davina Durgana

JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL SERVICE

School of International Service

American University

Washington, DC

MISSION

The Journal of International Service provides students with a forum to present their contributions to the field of International Relations. The Journal is committed to publishing articles that represent the academic fields studied at the School of International Service. These include: comparative and regional studies, international communication, international development, environmental politics, international economics, peace & conflict resolution studies, international politics, and US foreign policy. The Journal began in 1991 under the name Swords and Ploughshares—a name that represented the process by which a nation transforms from a state of war to a civilization of peace. The philosophy of the School of International Service is a milestone in civilization's journey toward an international community based on mutual understanding and respect, a philosophy that the Journal of International Service strives to promote.

SUBMISSIONS

Publication in the Journal of International Service provides students with an excellent opportunity to contribute to their fields and enhance their academic experience. Authors must be Master's or Ph.D. students currently enrolled at the School of International Service, or alumni that have graduated within a year of the current submission deadline. Papers representing all tracks at the School are accepted.

STAFF

Editor-in-Chief
Tara Sun Vanacore

Managing Editor
John Lo Forese

Copy Editors
Amanda Frank
Aurora Nou

Marketing & Distribution Editor
Forrest McGraw

Editorial Staff
Marc Curtin
Will Daming
Horia Michael Dijmarescu
Lisa Guetzkow
Jonathan Kittle
Gabriella Krohmal
Joshua Lee
Ashley Richardson
Natalia Suvorova

Submit papers to americanujis@gmail.com
Visit us online at www.american.edu/sis/jis

© Copyright 2013 Journal of International Service

Some rights reserved.

