

JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL SERVICE

Volume 20 | Number 2 | Fall 2011

“[C]ounterterror efforts that discourage humanitarians, marginalize minorities, and foreclose nonviolent legal tactics should be reevaluated.”

- Holly Chapin

Clarifying Material Support to Terrorists:
The Humanitarian Project Litigation and the U.S. Tamil Diaspora

VOLUME 20 | NUMBER 2 | FALL 2011

The Relevance of Nonviolent Struggle to Domestic Change in Iran

Andrew Clark

The Responsibility to Protect: Kenya’s Post-Electoral Crisis

Johannes Langer

The Right to Secede Under International Law: The Case of Somaliland

Peter Roethke

Justice Over Peace? Transitional Justice in Northern Uganda

Luciana Storelli-Castro

Clarifying Material Support to Terrorists: The Humanitarian Project Litigation and the U.S. Tamil Diaspora

Holly Chapin

Hizballah’s Media Strategy: Creating a “Theater of Terror”

Yelena Osipova

The Benefits of Econometric Firm Valuation in International Financial Disputes

Rachel Burton

The Impact of Historical Legacies, Transnational Networks, and Local Power Dynamics on Dominican Identity

Mark Hamilton

AMERICAN UNIVERSITY
WASHINGTON, DC

School of International Service | American University
www.journalofinternationalservice.org

JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL SERVICE

School of International Service

American University

Washington, DC

MISSION

The Journal of International Service provides students with a forum to present their contributions to the field of International Relations. The Journal is committed to publishing articles that represent the academic fields studied at the School of International Service. These include: comparative and regional studies, international communication, international development, environmental politics, international economics, peace & conflict resolution studies, international politics, and US foreign policy. The Journal began in 1991 under the name Swords and Ploughshares—a name that represented the process by which a nation transforms from a state of war to a civilization of peace. The philosophy of the School of International Service is a milestone in civilization's journey toward an international community based on mutual understanding and respect, a philosophy that the Journal of International Service strives to promote.

SUBMISSIONS

Publication in the Journal of International Service provides students with an excellent opportunity to contribute to their fields and enhance their academic experience. Authors must be Master's or Ph.D. students currently enrolled at the School of International Service, or alumni that have graduated within a year of the current submission deadline. Papers representing all tracks at the School are accepted.

STAFF

Editor-in-Chief
Halima Woodhead

Senior Editor
Clint Lohse

Senior Staff
Christine Belba-Smith
Kaitlyn Murphy
Maanasa Reddy

Editorial Staff
Ferdaouis Bagga
Veronica Beebe
Drew Cameron
Hierete Desta
Audra Gustin
Jimmy Koo
Josh Kuyers
Craig Mackey
Ashley Mills
Jessica Mitchell
Marc Moson
Timothy Olsen
Jeremy Riffle
Alina Shylapochnik
Jonathan Terrell

Submit papers to editor@journalofinternationalservice.org

Visit us online at www.journalofinternationalservice.org

© Copyright 2011 Journal of International Service

Some rights reserved.

