

JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL SERVICE

20th Anniversary Issue

“Increasing women’s political participation is important because an increased presence of women in government contributes to the realization of parity democracy, where women and men are equally represented and produce more thorough policy discussions.”

- Anna-Kristina Fox
Women’s Political Participation in Sub-Saharan Africa: Producing Policy that is Important to Women and Gender Parity?

VOLUME 21 | NUMBER 1 | SPRING 2012

Women’s Political Participation in Sub-Saharan Africa: Producing Policy that is Important to Women and Gender Parity? Anna-Kristina Fox

Russia and Cultural Production Under Consumer Capitalism Alina Shlyapochnik

Somaliland: A Model for Greater Somalia Liat Krawczyk

Regulatory Convergence and North American Integration: Lessons from the European Single Market Inu Barbee

Elite Capture or Capturing the Elite? The Political Dynamics Behind Community Driven Development Ana De Paiva

America’s Silent Warfare in Pakistan: An Analysis of Obama’s Drone Policy Annie Lynn Janus

Asia as a Law and Development Exception: Does Indonesia Fit the Mold? Jesse Roberts

Islamic Roots of Feminism in Egypt and Morocco Shreen A. Khan Knut Fournier

JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL SERVICE

School of International Service
American University
Washington, DC

MISSION

The Journal of International Service provides students with a forum to present their contributions to the field of International Relations. The Journal is committed to publishing articles that represent the academic fields studied at the School of International Service. These include: comparative and regional studies, international communication, international development, environmental politics, international economics, peace & conflict resolution studies, international politics, and US foreign policy. The Journal began in 1991 under the name Swords and Ploughshares—a name that represented the process by which a nation transforms from a state of war to a civilization of peace. The philosophy of the School of International Service is a milestone in civilization's journey toward an international community based on mutual understanding and respect, a philosophy that the Journal of International Service strives to promote.

SUBMISSIONS

Publication in the Journal of International Service provides students with an excellent opportunity to contribute to their fields and enhance their academic experience. Authors must be Master's or Ph.D. students currently enrolled at the School of International Service, or alumni that have graduated within a year of the current submission deadline. Papers representing all tracks at the School are accepted.

STAFF

Editor-in-Chief
Maanasa K. Reddy

Senior Editor
Nick Heras

Publishing Editor
Clint Lohse

Managing Editor
Luke Heselden

Marketing and Distribution Editor
Halima Woodhead

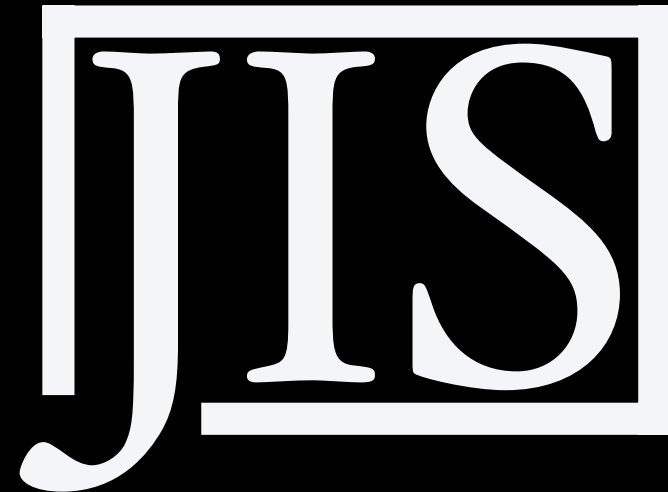

Editorial Staff
Drew Cameron
Josh Kuyers
George Lynch
Chelsea Masters
Aurora Nou
Sheila Sengupta
Natalia Suvorova
Tara Vanacore
Jake Wright

Submit papers to editor@journalofinternationalservice.org

Visit us online at www.journalofinternationalservice.org

© Copyright 2011 Journal of International Service
Some rights reserved.

MIX
Paper from responsible sources
FSC® C010897